System Requirements: Windows XP/Vista/7/8/8.1/10 (32 or 64 bit)This invention relates to a method of manufacturing a multilayer print-dispensing head for a printer and, more particularly, to a method of manufacturing a print-dispensing head which is capable of outputting full-color images of high quality. A multilayer print-dispensing head of the type referred to above is described in Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 50-32940. This print-dispensing head comprises a plurality of liquid discharge openings having differing apertures and a plurality of liquid supply openings each communicating with the respective liquid discharge opening and adapted to supply liquid to the liquid discharge opening. The multilayer print-dispensing head described above is manufactured by the steps of forming a plurality of liquid discharge openings in a substrate using photolithography, forming a plurality of liquid supply openings which extend from the liquid discharge openings to the outside of the substrate, and forming a sealing layer of glass over the substrate. A protective layer is formed on the glass layer. The protective layer and the glass layer are etched away in a region where the liquid supply openings are to be formed. The substrate thus obtained is pressed against a glass plate. The substrate and the glass plate are heated and fused together. An external force is applied to a portion of the fused glass surface where the liquid supply openings are to be formed. The glass plate is then removed. The step of forming liquid supply openings on the substrate is repeated in the other regions of the substrate. In this method, the glass plate is removed after the fused glass is pressed against the glass plate, and this deformation is transmitted to the fused glass layer. Therefore, it is very difficult to precisely control the dimensions of the openings formed in the fused glass layer. In addition, since the glass plate is relatively rigid, the glass plate tends to deform when subjected to the external force which is applied in order to form the liquid supply openings. This impairs the accuracy of the dimensions of the openings formed in
